The Weird World of Cable TV
Or How to Be a Superstar for $15

National Enquirer gossip columnist R. Couri Hay claims to be the highest-paid journalist in the world but has stayed on cable continuously for the past seven years. "Before I got into cable," says the engaging Couri, a socialite who serves champagne in his swanky townhouse every evening at 5 P.M., "all I knew how to do was get dressed up and go to parties. I brought color and stars to cable," he says. "I brought the big time." For the past year Couri has been presenting a 36-part series, "the world's longest television documentary," on the late couturier Charles James.
